Frank Lloyd Wright and Japan Revisited Traditional Japanese Culture as a Means to Modern American Architecture

Friday, November 14th, 18:00 (JST)

Kevin Nute
SPEAKER

Sutra library, Chion-in Temple, Kyoto (1905).

Photographer: Frank Lloyd Wright. Collection of Frank Lloyd Wright Trust, Chicago.

This talk expands on more than three decades of research that began in 1993 with the publication of the American Institute of Architects-Award-winning book Frank Lloyd Wright and Japan. With the goal of better understanding Wright's philosophical priorities and process of design, his interpretations of traditional Japanese forms are re-examined in the context of current notions otherness, appropriation, abstraction, synthesis, translation and myth.
